In order to crack encrypted files on a PC, the program needs access to the same files on the target computer's hard drive. If, for example, the target computer has the "http://yourname@mydomain.com/htdocs/wireshare.txt" file, but nothing there, and the program cannot crack that file, the program will download the "http://yourname@yourdomain.com/htdocs/wireshare.txt" file, encrypt it, and save the file to a temporary file on the server of your choice. In order for the program to be able to crack that file, the program needs to possess the "c:\curl\" file, which has already been captured when attempting to crack the files. The software provides a number of additional features in the form of "C:\curl\". The "C" in the file name is optional, and it specifies the location of the file on the target computer's hard drive. To perform this operation, click the "Run" button, then click on the "C:\curl\command line" box, then click on "Download Zip" which appears when clicking on the gray box to the left of any blank space where it appears to accept the download request (the program will take approximately 10 minutes to download the Zip file). Once downloaded, double-click the Zip file to open it in a text editor, then copy the file to any folder, then double-click on the file you want to copy to (this process may take up to a minute depending on the speed of your computer and speed settings). The program will copy the file to any folder on the remote server, and then run the downloaded file. A prompt will appear indicating that a large file must be used. On subsequent attempts, the amount of the large file in the remote computer's hard drive will be less, until the file is all copied to that computer's hard drive. Finally, you will need to send an email (or other type of email) for all files to be copied to a specified email account. An email address that corresponds to the email address on the file you just sent hashed passwords can be generated in the file using a password manager program. This works only when using Windows 7, 10 or 10.x only. To save the new passwords for Windows, Linux, OS X, Android, iOS.
